

Alaska Monthly Fire Potential Outlook

- Forecast:

- Alaskan winters typically see minimal wildland fire activity. January through April fire potential is expected to be normal.

- Factors:

- Alaska is out of fire season; fuels are frozen and cloaked in ample snow cover, and will remain so for the winter, keeping fire activity minimal.
- Below normal temperatures have occurred throughout much of the state, and will likely continue into January. However, mid-winter temperatures do not have a large impact on fire potential.